PARKER, BRIDGET & CO., "Ninth and the Avenue."

To-day we inaugurate our semi-annual clearance sale of men's "distinctive" suits and overcoats

It's welcome news to the hundreds who've waited for it, because they appreciate the legitimacy of the reduction, the distinctive stylishness of Parker-Bridget clothing and the splendid opportunity afforded for saving, which comes but TWICE a year—in January and July.

Twice a year—just previous to inventory time—do we cut prices that the stock may be entirely disposed of—in keeping with the unswerving principle of this organization to never carry over the goods of one season to the other.

No "special sales" between times—and let us say right here that such periodical "sales" of which you often read are nothing more than lame excuses for price-cutting which never takes place. Give us credit for having never attempted to deceive you—for maintaining a high standard in ready-to-wear clothing—and offering it at the lowest prices possible to quote.

This sale includes all the plain black and blue suits, as well as those of fancy fabrics—every suit in the house, except the full-dress, tuxedos, and Prince Alberts.

HUGHES OUTLINES WORK AT ALBANY

Big Crowd Present at His Second Inauguration.

WILL RENDER LOYAL SERVICE

Governor Declares He Will Live Up to the Constitution—Assembly Room of the Capitol Transformed into Hall of Patriotism by Decorations—Reception Follows.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 1.—Charles Evans Hughes was inducted for a second time into the office of governor of the Empire State at noon to-day.

Clear, cold weather ushered in inauguration day. There has been light flurries of snow, just enough to put a thin mantle upon everything.

The inauguration took place in the assembly room of the capitol. The decorations had transformed the big, bare room into a hall of patriotism. Flags, shields, pennants, and State colors met the eye at every turn, all interspersed with twirls of the forest.

Gov. Hughes reached the capitol just before the noon hour. It was a perfect day, and the marching conditions were fine. The governor received an ovation all along the line of march.

The assembly chamber was crowded to the doors long before inaugural hour arrived, but the people crowded the capitol corridors and entrances in the endeavor to get a view of the inaugural procession. The police arrangements were excellent.

Military Display a Feature.

The military display was a feature of the inaugural ceremony. There were 1,500 National Guardsmen in line and Brig. Gen. James H. Lloyd was the grand marshal, with Troop B as his immediate escort.

There were no civilian organizations in line, as had been the custom before.

Tennessen crowds rendered the streets leading to the mansion and the capitol almost impassable. The parade started at 11 o'clock from the foot of Capitol Hill and proceeded to the executive mansion.

Gov. Hughes and his staff on arriving at the capitol proceeded to the executive chamber, where the senators assembled in the senate chamber, the assemblymen in the assembly parlor, and the retiring State officers, their families, the families of the members of the incoming administration, and other guests of honor in the secretary of state's office. Just before the noon hour the different assemblages marched to the assembly chamber, the scene of the inaugural ceremony. Meanwhile the chamber and galleries had been crowded to the limit.

His Parents Present.

The invited guests occupied a big platform erected over the speaker's desk. They included the members of the governor's family, Rev. David C. Hughes and Mrs. Hughes, the governor's parents; the governor's immediate family, and the other State officers and their wives.

When Gov. Hughes entered with his staff, he had a fine greeting.

The exercises were opened with a prayer by Right Rev. T. N. A. Burke, the Catholic Bishop of Albany.

Hughes was recorded a rousing reception. He then delivered his inaugural address, which, in part, was as follows:

"Fellow-citizens: The State of New York, with its composite population and its varied interests, presents difficult governmental problems, and yet by virtue of the acumen and public spirit of its citizens it should stand as an exemplar of just and efficient administration.

"Here should be found the most approved methods of State government within its free sphere. Our forests should be preserved and nurtured with scientific care. Our water powers should be developed for the suitable expansion of industry. Improved artificial waterways, supplementing our steel roads, should link our important ports and interior markets; and a network of highways, well planned, well constructed, and properly maintained, should unite our cities and villages throughout the State and facilitate the carriage of our farm products. Agriculture should be encouraged by apt provision for diffusing the teachings of experience. Our streams should be free from pollution and the public health safeguarded by all practical precautions. Public education should take due account of necessary preparation for useful living.

"Law should be employed under fair conditions, assuring due regard for health and safety. Our charities, our hospitals, our prisons should reflect the counsels of wise philanthropy and exhibit the most intelligent efforts for custodial care, cure, and reformation. Our processes for the settlement of disputes and the punishment of crime should display the least possible delays and the fewest technical obstructions consistent with opportunity for fair hearing and proper deliberation. Our laws so far as possible should be general and not special. The charters of our cities should establish local responsibility for the details of administration, thus making each municipality a training school for the development of civic spirit. Our electoral machinery should be carefully safeguarded to assure uncorrupted expression of the popular will. And the supremacy of public right and the just exercise of public privilege should ever be enforced to the end that individual liberty should have its proper scope and that the common interest upon which the liberties of all ultimately depend should be secure against exploitation.

Live Up to the Constitution.

"We may congratulate ourselves upon the gains which have been made, and we may devote ourselves to these important tasks inspired by the work of the long line of faithful servants who through the generations have striven for the public good and have made possible our present attainments.

"Government is merely an organ of the community to the ends of peace and order essential to individual liberty and opportunity and also to maintain the collective rights which cannot otherwise be safeguarded. Our dependence for progress is not chiefly upon governmental agencies, but upon the virtues of sobriety, industry, thrift, and moderation, and upon the gradual supplanting of motives of mere self-interest by those inspired by the appeals of brotherhood and of my own limitations. But I have an intense desire to render loyal service to the people. I congratulate the other officers who to-day assume official privileges, and I voice your friendly interest in wishing them the highest degree of success in the discharge of their new responsibilities."

The Right Rev. Richard H. Nelson, Episcopal Bishop-coadjutor of Albany, closed the exercises with a benediction. Gov. Hughes held a public reception for an hour in the executive chamber immediately after the formal exercises. A general reception was held at the executive mansion from 3:30 to 5 o'clock.

HAINS TO TAKE STAND

Defendant's Story Will Be Told Next Monday.

"FUROR TRANSITORIA" A PLEA

Words "Brain Storm" and "Paranoia" Will Not Be Used, and Effort Made to Show that Slayer of Annis Was Nervous, but Not Dangerous Except in Presence of His Victim.

New York, Jan. 1.—Soon after the Hains trial is resumed on Monday morning Thornton Jenkins Hains, the defendant, will take the stand in his own behalf and tell his version of the events of August 15 at the Bayside Yacht Club, and also will tell of many things which led up to the killing of Annis by his brother. One part of the prisoner's own testimony which so far has not been revealed, and upon which the attorneys for the defense place so much importance, will be his statement of two occasions on which, while in his company, Capt. Hains met Annis after the captain's hurried return from the Philippines.

One of these accidental meetings was at Thirty-third Street and Broadway about the first of August—some two weeks before the shooting.

The second was four or five days later and at a place not yet made public. On both of these occasions Thornton Hains will testify that the captain appeared seething with an uncontrollable impulse to do bodily injury to the man whom he believed had wrecked his home and the defendant was compelled to use all his powers of persuasion as well as physical force to restrain his brother. The defense then will claim that there were three such insane outbreaks on the part of the captain, each brought on by the sight of Annis, the third resulting in Annis' death.

Defense Is Outlined.

The developments of the past few days of the trial, as well as this announcement made to-day by John F. McIntyre, chief counsel for the defense, reveal the outline of the defense which will be offered on behalf of Capt. Hains in case District Attorney Frederick De Witt decides to bring the other brother to trial.

How to Get Rid of Catarrh

The words "brain storm" and "paranoia" will not be used, and instead of these will come in "furor transitoria." It will be claimed by the defense that the captain, his mind broken by the revelations made to him concerning his wife, was subject to these "furors" at the sight of Annis, at other times being nervous and, perhaps, irrational, but not dangerous.

While Capt. Hains' defense will be insanity, his lawyers are prepared to show that he had reason to believe that his own life was in danger. The defense will produce testimony to the effect that Annis on more than one occasion had threatened the captain's life, and, furthermore, that these threats were communicated to Capt. Hains.

Annis Went Armed.

The defense also may produce testimony to show that Annis continually went armed, although, of course, no attempt will be made to show self-defense as a motive for the killing, since Annis was in his bathing suit at the time, and besides, this would not harmonize with the plea of insanity. This constant carrying of a revolver by Annis had been going on even before the captain's divorce suit had been filed, the defense's witnesses state.

Another development of to-day was the discovery of a new witness by the defense. This witness may precede Thornton Hains on the stand, and will swear that he was fishing near the yacht club float at the time of the killing of Annis, and that the shots were fired all in an instant, without appreciable pause.

The Sixth Sense.

Dr. Paul Carus, the editor of the Open Court, refers to a belief which prevailed in the Middle Ages that the faculty of prophetic dreams was a sixth sense, which was outwardly indicated by the possession of six fingers or toes. Only a searching critic may have discovered that Pope Sixtus IV is represented by Raphael in the Sistine Madonna as possessed of six fingers, yet it is plainly visible to every one who takes the trouble to look for it. In Raphael's magnificent painting of the marriage of the Virgin to St. Joseph (the Birth at Milan) the groom's foot is left bare, which incident is not fortuitous, but offers the artist an opportunity to show that Joseph was a man possessed of the sixth sense, the faculty of dream.

FROM WOMAN'S POINT OF VIEW

The average shopper is a great spend-thrift in strength, particularly when she lives some distance from the shopping district of the city in which she spends her money. She plans for it as she plans a vacation or a social function, and when she boards the railway or trolley car she is armed with a list as long as the moral law and one which is bound to take her over a large territory, mostly on foot. She is too busy to lunch in Christian fashion, so she misses that small rest.

The occasional wise woman keeps a notebook, in which is recorded her needs in the shopping line. She does not allow them to exceed a comfortable number before she makes an early toilet and starts for town. She does no more than she has planned, whatever temptation besets her, and if her luncheon hour finds her away from home, she knows better than to play tricks with her health—she eats comfortably, and rests her body while doing it. When she reaches home she removes her shoes and outer garments, lies down in a comfortable position, and rests for as many minutes as she can spare.

A fresh toilet makes her ready for afternoon and evening, and the next shopping trip has no terrors for her. One has only to look at the drawn, troubled faces of women in the streets and shops to understand how much strain they are placing on muscles and nerves. We hear, sometimes, of the pleasure women find in shopping, but we do not see it. There is no lingering over the beauties of shimmering silk and rich velvet, because hair comb counters have converted us into mobs.

Occasionally one can wander into a store and find a seat before the counter at which one's money is to be spent. In the majority of shops seats have been abolished, presumably to hasten business. So we shop by telephone and mail and save our time and strength. The elimination of leisure and pleasure has reduced shopping to a hard task which is to be shirked when possible. All this is good for business, of course, but it is hard to sacrifice everything to practicability.

I wonder if women realize their cruelty in dragging children about on shopping tours. Babies and dogs are out of place in crowds, and it seems as if some provision might be made to have them looked after at home. I am sure that the next door neighbor would be sufficiently charitable to look after children and pets when the owners are obliged to leave home for a few hours; I have often done it without waiting to be asked. To-day I stumbled over a mile small enough to hide behind one of those occasional seats I mentioned, and the mother was not at all concerned over its walls, which I did my best to stop. At the holiday season children are very much in evidence, and some of them are rude and horrid. I reckon it is not good for childish morals and manners to become part and parcel of shopping crowds.
